

Little Chicks and How They Grow!

These are the little chicks when we brought them home from the Agrico. They are 1 day old. They are so cute and fluffy. They cuddle together and chirp very loud.

These are the little chicks in their new home. They are 1 week old. They have a heat lamp to keep them warm!

They eat lots of food

And drink lots of water!

They are beginning to grow feathers on the tips of their wings.

The little chicks are not so little any more. They are 2 weeks old and are starting to out grow their bin. They get so excited when we feed them that they almost jump out of their bin. Pretty soon we will move them into their new home in the barn.

Stay tuned for more updates on the little chicks and please send us pictures of any baby animals that you see!

The little chicks have moved into their new home in the barn. They like having more room to move around!

They are 3 weeks old and continue to grow. They are covered in white feathers now.

The chicks are growing bigger and bigger! They are 4 weeks old.

The little chicks are full grown. They are 10 weeks old.

Some are hens that cluck, cluck, cluck and ...

some are roosters that crow, COCK-A-DOODLE-DOO!
